The other curiosity is hard to figure out: If an Ambulance with it's siren's on hit's a bike 'n the biker goes flyin' 20 meters thru the air crashin' thru a shop window who get's blamed and for how much? Does the driver of the Ambulance presently tryin' to save someone's life, with the siren's on, get fired, fined and/or sued? Of course, it does depend on the state of the bike and the shop window. If the bike is just a little bent and the window just a little cracked then the biker could have picked himself up and inflicted wounds upon himself, or does the bike always win? If the bike and the window are shattered into a million pieces then that's, of course, an entirely different story. If the shop owner gets killed too, in the accident, then everyone one is confused... The moral of this story is: If you bike drunken the way I do, at 55 km/hr, then you'll probably break your own neck slamming so hard into a pole, you don't know what hits you anymore...
